Today’s Presenter

"The only thing worse than being blind is having sight but no vision."

"The best and most beautiful things in the world cannot be seen or even touched - they must be felt with the heart."

"Alone we can do so little; together we can do so much."

our Contrast Check

Justified Text

A common type of text alignment in print media is "justification", where the spaces between words, and, to a lesser extent, between glyphs or letters, are stretched or compressed to align both the left and right ends of each line of text. When using justification, it is customary to treat the last line of a paragraph separately by simply left or right aligning it, depending on the language direction. Lines in which the spaces have been stretched beyond their normal width are called loose lines, while those whose spaces have been compressed are called tight lines.

Italic Text

In typography, italic type is a cursive font based on a stylized form of calligraphic handwriting. Owing to the influence from calligraphy, such fonts normally slant slightly to the right. Italics are a way to emphasize key points in a printed text, or when quoting a speaker a way to show which words they stressed. One manual of English usage described italics as "the print equivalent of underlining". Too much italic text can become difficult to read for people with dyslexia. Limit it to a short sentence for emphasis instead of several long paragraphs.

Centered Text

A common type of text alignment in print media is "justification", where the spaces between words, and, to a lesser extent, between glyphs or letters, are stretched or compressed to align both the left and right ends of each line of text. When using justification, it is customary to treat the last line of a paragraph separately by simply left or right aligning it, depending on the language direction. Lines in which the spaces have been stretched beyond their normal width are called loose lines, while those whose spaces have been compressed are called tight lines.

Dyslexia

"I can see everything…
but can't always trust what I see."

1. Select easy-to-read fonts
2. Use the right amount contrast
3. Avoid justified and large blocks of centered or italic text
